

CRUSHED IN A LANDSLIDE

Avalanche of Rock and Earth Sweeps Down Upon C. G. Wilson in Parley's Canyon, Killing Him.

LANDSLIDE IN PARLEY'S CANYON.

DURING a disastrous landslide at the Portland Cement company's quarry in Parley's canyon yesterday afternoon, C. G. Wilson, one of the quartermen, was crushed to death beneath a ton-ton rock and the artificial structure of the quarry was wrecked. The avalanche of rock and earth came down from a distance of 100 feet or more, with such rapidity that the other employees barely escaped with their lives. When the slide was over the quarry was a pile of chaotic wreckage. The accident occurred about 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Wilson and several companions were putting in a blast at the foot of the mountain slope when there was a warning crash from above as the pile of rock and earth tore away from its moorings. The men, experienced in such matters, recognized the meaning of the warning and ran for their lives. All of the men except Wilson ran towards the eastern side of the quarry and escaped just in time to save themselves from being crushed beneath a thousand or more tons of rock and earth that came tearing down the steep decline of the mountain.

Wilson ran towards the south, and was almost over the edge of a rock and fell to the ground, across a sharp rock that projected from the soil. Before he could move a big rock, weighing in the neighborhood of ten tons, crashed into the pit and rolled on to him, pinning him down and burying him beneath its ponderous weight. His companions saw him fall and bravely made a rush to his assistance, but the restlessness and death-dealing rush of the big rock made them flee again to save their own lives, and they were forced to see the form of their companion mangled beneath the mighty avalanche.

Although pinned to the earth by the big rock with his back across the sharp rock over which he fell Wilson was still alive when the avalanche was over, and called feebly to his companions for assistance. They responded, but it took twenty minutes or more with all the machinery to move the rock under which he lay. In the meantime Dr. S. L. Richards was summoned. It was found upon examination that the body of Wilson had been crushed in several places. His body is still at the quarry awaiting the arrival of his brother.

The destruction to the machinery of the quarry was almost complete. The car tracks upon which the rock is hauled away were completely destroyed, the big iron rails being twisted and bent, and the machinery was splintered. Before the rushing mass of rock some of the rails and machinery of heavy steel snapped, it is said, like glass. The cars in which the rock is removed were smashed to splinters and the whole place, it is said, looked as though it had been struck by a volcanic eruption.

The slide is attributed to the snow and rain that has fallen lately. The moisture, it is said, loosened the earth, and probably a slight jar to the mass caused by the drilling, broke the last fetter that held the enormous mass in place and precipitated it upon those below. It is estimated that not less than 1,000 tons of material fell. It is probable that such a slide as this has never before occurred in the canyon since the settlement of these valleys at least. Wilson was a married man and leaves a wife and several children. His home was originally in Richfield, where his family is now.

TWO WOMEN CAPTURE A BURGLAR AND TURN HIM OVER TO THE POLICE

Two women seized a burglar, pinned him to the floor and held him until he had calmed down. Then they turned him over to the police. The women were Mrs. Alexander, 155 North Fifth West street, and a friend who was visiting her.

The two women were sitting alone in the house when they heard a noise at the door, fumbling around the keyhole. They kept quiet and listened. Presently they heard a key grating in the lock. They stepped quietly forward and stood at the door.

In a moment the bolt slipped inside the door opened, and a man stepped inside the room. He did not get far. Before he had a chance to realize what was going on, the two women had seized him in an embrace far from affectionate. They held his arms close to his side, and tried to throw him to the floor. He struggled desperately, but they had the advantage in the surprise. They forced him to the floor and held him there. Then they called for help. Neighbors came and assisted them in keeping the burglar captive until the police, who were summoned by telephone, could arrive.

A detail of officers took charge of a decidedly surprised man and hustled him to the station, where he gave the name of John Foster. A charge of burglary was placed against him. Foster protests that he was innocent of any wrong intent, but he fails to account for the possession of a skeleton key with which he obtained entrance to the room.
